November 2025

For many of you, 10 November will be a monumental day: the 250th birthday of the United States Marine Corps. On 10 November, 1775, the Second Continental Congress passed a resolution to raise two battalions of marines, to be led by Captain Samuel Nicholas. Their initial purpose was to serve as infantry units aboard naval vessels and were responsible for the security of the ship and crew (this mission ended in 1998). They conducted both offensive and defensive combat during boarding actions and defended the ship's officers in the face of a mutiny.

The founding is where the legendary Tun Tavern comes into play. The tavern was built in 1686 by Joshua Carpenter, a Quaker. The name comes from Old English, as "tun" meant a barrel of beer. Many organizations were founded in the tavern, the Continental Congress held some meetings there and even the Navy was established there during one of their meetings on 13 October 1775. Captain Nicholas was the innkeeper at Tun Tavern, so that was the very spot that Nicholas held his first recruitment drive. Unfortunately, in 1781, Tun Tavern burned to the ground and now there is a commemorative marker near the original site as the I-95 now goes right through the actual location although there is an ongoing effort to build a replica less than 250 yards from the original.

It was not long until the Marines went to sea and started taking decisive action. Under the command of Commodore Esek Hopkins, they set sail the following January and in March, they undertook their first ever (and America's first ever) amphibious landing in the Bahamas, the Raid of Nassau. America was running low on gunpowder, they stormed the beaches, seizing two forts and large quantities of gunpowder and other military supplies, before sailing back to New England after a two-week occupation of Nassau.

There are two battles mentioned in The Marines' Hymn, "the Halls of Montezuma and the shores of Tripoli". "The Halls of Montezuma" refers to the Battle of Chapultepec on 12/13 September 1847 during the Mexican-American War. This was a battle which took place at the strategically located Chapultepec Castle outside Mexico City; she sat atop a 200-foot hill surrounded by a 1600-yard-long wall. The castle was being defended by 832 men against 2000 U.S. Marines and soldiers. We won the battle, which played an outsized role in our successful victory in the war as the victory opened up Mexico City for us to occupy the following day and it dealt a severe blow to the morale of the Mexicans. This resulted in Santa Anna stepping down as president, a provisional government being established and the ending of hostilities on 2 February 1848 with a clear American victory in the war. Many officers participated in our invasion of Mexico, including future generals Ulysses Grant, Stonewall Jackson and Robert E. Lee among many others who played prominent roles on both sides of our Civil War.

Throughout the 250 years of the Marine Corps, they have been engaged with an enemy force for the overwhelming majority of their history. As an example, in the 30 years of the post-bellum years, the Marines were involved in 28 separate interventions overseas, mainly in the Caribbean. While they have been under the Navy since 30 June, 1834, they are a distinct fighting force whose amphibious prowess helped to turn the tide of war in the Pacific Theater in World War II. Throughout their history, at least 41,4448 Marines have paid the ultimate sacrifice so that we may live free.

May God bless them and God bless America. Semper Fidelis Marines, Happy Birthday.
